ABSTRACT

Given a digital video clip, this invention describes how to efficiently compute the motion vectors and motion trajectory of each identified video object for facilitating various commonly encountered visual applications, such as video compression for transmission and archiving, security and surveillance monitoring, and search-by-query required in the Internet search engine or digital library.